

A photograph of a family of four sitting on a green couch in a bright, modern living room. A woman with curly hair is laughing heartily, leaning back against a man who is also laughing. A young girl with curly hair is sitting between them, laughing and holding the woman's hand. The man is sitting to the right, smiling and looking towards the camera. The background features a white wall with a large, abstract sculpture and a potted plant.

Case Examples and Referral Process

Participant Story

Shawn* had been struggling with lower back pain for over five years. He had tried various treatments but still experienced significant pain, especially while sitting for long periods of time. His primary care physician referred him to an orthopedic specialist, who recommended spinal fusion surgery.

Shawn got a second opinion from one of the specialists recommended by a Medical Ally. He then made an informed decision to avoid spinal fusion surgery and pursue a less invasive procedure. The information and support provided gave him peace of mind and enabled him to take steps to improve his overall wellness and quality of life. Shawn has made numerous lifestyle changes, with an emphasis on activities that will help strengthen his back.

I was surprised (and relieved) that the recommended second opinion challenged the original opinion. I am so grateful for my Medical Ally.
